Lust is not the problem the problem is what you are trying to numb with it and there was a time when i thought i just had a high drive until The Hidden Trap of Self Sabotage dorean kng showed me that my obsession was actually a way to escape my own emptiness and now i am learning to sit with myself instead of chasing distractions so thank you for this.

As someone who has lived a long life of self sabotage. Smoking, drugs, alcohol and vaping. I quit everything cold turkey at different times in my life. I quit drugs and drinking before I was saved. After salvation I quit weed, any pills that could put me under an influence, and eventually quit vaping(quiting nicotine was rough). But lust has been the hardest one to quit, and why not. It's absolutely free and everywhere. But it actually costs so much...

To those who ever feel demotivated after relapse. Just remember that it is also indirectly improving your patience. One who used to lose every week has now became strong enough to beat lust for months. Even it reduces the frequency of energy loss and make you even more stronger than before. Once you gain mental strength enough you can win anything.

Guys if you relapse you didn't start back from zero, your body and mind still remember what it was when you were clean, you fell down but you are still where you are at the race so keep going

I managed to reach 148 days, but this video depicted exactly what happened to me—a sense of relaxation, overconfidence, the feeling that I had already won... Suddenly, the fall came, and it was horrible. But I am now rebuilding my strategies, and I've come to understand that this battle will last forever—much like what the Bible says, that the enemy prowls around like a lion.

I'm still on the streak even it is only the 10th day. For the important exam 100 days after, I'll never break the streak!!!!!!!! Wish me luck.

Imagine getting reset to day 0 every time you sin. Praise God that He sent His son to take the place of our punishment on day 0! We don't get reset, He draws us closer to Him YET!
